B5. The UK government recently intervened to prevent the enacting of the Scottish government's Gender Recognition Reform Bill, because in their view it has an unlawful impact on the operation of related legislation in England and Wales and exceeds the devolved powers of the Scottish Parliament. Do you believe it was appropriate for the UK government to take this action?		Base: All respondents

B6. The Scottish Government has announced that it currently intends to mount a legal challenge to the UK government's intervention over the Gender Recognition Reform bill, which is likely to be ultimately determined in the Supreme Court at a significant cost to Scottish and UK taxpayers. The UK government has urged the Scottish Government to instead work with it to present an amended version of the bill which is compliant with UK law, while women's-rights campaigners have called on them to drop the bill completely.
